"The Westminster Dictionary of Theological Terms" was a required text for one of my graduate classes. My only regret is that I waited so long to purchase it. The dictionary is not a complete guide to every theological term in existence, but it certainly carries a vast array of words from topics such as church history to philosophy.

Fides quaerens intellectum means "faith seeking understanding" or "faith seeking intelligence". It is the theological method stressed by Augustine (354–430) and Anselm of Canterbury (c. 1033 – 1109) in which one begins with faith in God and on the basis of that faith moves on to further understanding of Christian truth. Anselm uses this expression for the first time in his Proslogion (II ...
